the server system is known as a microcomputer, especially in times when such machines had consisted of ibm-compatible personal computers and home computers. the microcomputer is intended to serve as a hub for multiple personal computers on a home network, providing the computing resources of a single computer that those attached to the hub can use.

larger systems are sometimes referred to as a minicomputer or mainframe computer. a microcomputer is not restricted to ibm hardware, and over the years, many machines have been built that fit the generic definition. rivendell is an advanced, enterprise-ready digital asset management solution. it streamlines the creation, management, and delivery of digital assets. with rivendell, you can create and manage full-featured cd-roms, jukeboxes, kiosks, printjacks, digital signage, and video walls. rivendell is a fork of the popular open source digital asset management software, xuggle. xuggle is a creative commons non-profit organization which makes widely used libraries of video, audio, stills and web content available to users and developers on a freely available basis.

rivendell supports the java virtual machine (jvm) and its lightweight containers. the rivendell code base was originally based on the xuggle code base. academ has been well supported in the past on linux and other open-source platforms. it is a decentralized and distributed learning network (dln) built on the blockchain. it enables the creation of free and universal knowledge. it provides a solution to the two main issues of the online learning industry: the lack of quality and the lack of accessibility.

academ is created in order to change the current unfair world of knowledge. in the future, all will be able to access free knowledge and acquire qualifications through online learning and working. academ is built with the blockchain, allowing knowledge creators to become their own gatekeepers. therefore, it is a true peer-to-peer learning network.
